

There is no similarity between golf and putting; they are two different games, one played in the air, and the other on the ground. ~ Ben

RULE OF THE MONTH

Q:

A right-handed player's ball is so close to a boundary fence on the left of a hole that the player, in order to play towards the hole, must play left-handed. In playing a left-handed stroke, the player's backswing would be interfered with by an immovable obstruction. Is the player entitled to relief from the obstruction?

Cary Middlecoff: "Anyone who hasn't been nervous, or hasn't choked somewhere down the line, is an idiot."

Ben Hogan: "I hate a hook. It nauseates me. I could vomit when I see one. It's like a rattlesnake in your pocket."

. I don't fear death, but I sure don't like those three-footers for par. ~ Chi Chi Rodriguez

You can hit a 2-acre fairway 10-percent of the time, but hit a 2-inch branch 90-percent of the time.

"Most people will miss a putt for nothing. A little money, and the weak are certain to miss."

A:
The player is entitled to relief since use of an abnormal (left-handed) stroke is reasonable in the circumstances -- see Exception under Rule 24-2b.

The proper procedure is for the player to take relief for a left-handed stroke in accordance with Rule 24-2b(i).

The player may then use a normal right-handed swing for his next stroke. If the obstruction interferes with the swing or stance for the right-handed stroke, the player may take relief for the right-handed stroke in accordance with Rule 24-2b(i).
